

MARYLAND
FOOD BANK

UNTIL HUNGER ENDS.

INTERSECTIONS

FY 2013 ANNUAL REPORT

The intersections between hunger and vital issues like health, employment, safety and education have increasingly informed and inspired our work this year. We continued to build a complex system of highways and byways, partnerships and programs to reach every community and family in need.

MARYLAND
UNTIL HUNGER ENDS.

Our Mission: To lead the movement and nurture the belief that together we can improve the lives of Marylanders by ending hunger.

DEAR FRIENDS,

This year was focused on insight and innovation. We continued to seek fresher, more nutritious foods to fill our shelves. Our Farm to Food Bank Program grew, while more retailers signed up to donate nutrient-rich proteins. As we targeted distribution to underserved communities, we launched MFB Kids™ and a Senior Pantry Program to better reach at-risk populations. Our spirits were boosted by Feeding America's Map the Meal Gap Report, which showed declines in food insecurity. By year-end, we had further bridged the meal gap by distributing nearly 29 million meals to families in need — 7 million more than the previous year.

Unfortunately, these achievements were the result of a rapidly growing need. Sequestration cut funding for social programs that many of our clients rely on. Fights over the farm bill threatened the Supplemental Nutrition Assistance Program (SNAP, commonly known as food stamps). Suddenly, we were forced to make the case for food assistance, and fight to dispel myths and stereotypes about those we serve. Just weeks after seeing signs of progress, we were losing ground.

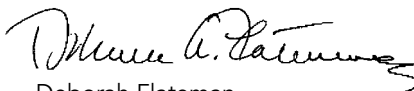

The upside was that we were forced to articulate the value of our work and the potential impact of achieving our mission. Hunger affects every aspect of a person's life. The intersections between hunger and a person's health, their ability to learn, to support their family, and to build a strong stable neighborhood around them create endless unfortunate cycles that prevent individual success and halt collective progress.

With this in mind, we will continue to be the bridge that gets families through tough times. We will seize partnership opportunities to offer holistic support and ultimately shorten the line of people who are chronically in need. And, increasingly, we will speak out, and ask you to do the same. Ending hunger is an idea whose time has come, but we need to create the will — the full-scale movement that believes in the power of a strong safety net. Hunger affects us all, and it will take all of us to end hunger.

With sincere thanks,

Philip M. Andrews

& hunger HEALTH

Simply put, poor nutrition leads to poor health. People who are not well nourished are more susceptible to illness and more likely to develop chronic disease. Senior citizens, pregnant women and children are at the greatest risk.

In too many Maryland communities — particularly low-income urban neighborhoods, and remote rural areas — nutritious, affordable, and high-quality food is not accessible. Processed foods from convenience stores and fast food restaurants, on the other hand, are easy to find and inexpensive.

As concerns grow over the cost of healthcare and an alarming increase in chronic diseases, “food deserts” — areas where there is little or no access to healthy and affordable food — have catapulted to the forefront of policy discussions. Public officials at the local, state, and national levels are beginning to recognize that access to healthy food plays a major role in promoting a healthy populace, healthy neighborhoods, and a healthy economy.

The Maryland Food Bank continued to address this crisis of access last year through a carefully-constructed network of partners and programs. In Fiscal Year 2013, distribution through our network of 975 partners increased by 31 percent. Where service gaps remained, our Pantry on the Go program stepped in. More than 900 mobile distributions took place last year, speeding more than 6.3 million pounds of fresh, nutrient-rich food to Marylanders in need.

hunger & EMPLOYMENT

Maryland is the richest state in the country, based on median household income. Yet one in seven Marylanders are food insecure. For children, the situation is even worse; one in six struggle with food insecurity.

While our state's economy has begun to recover from the 2008 recession, a wider lens reveals complex issues that remain unresolved. Middle-income jobs that were once pathways out of poverty are increasingly scarce. In fact, many of the jobs that returned after the recession simply do not pay enough to feed a family. The gap from poverty to economic stability has grown larger and deeper.

Food assistance from the Maryland Food Bank is critical, as families strive to bridge that gap. We help as workers struggle with long-term unemployment, take low-paying positions temporarily while searching for better long-term jobs, and retrain for new careers in growing fields.

Among those growing fields is the food service industry, and that's where our FoodWorks culinary training program comes in. Over the course of 12 weeks, students learn advanced culinary techniques, and become certified experts in food safety — all while producing meals for hungry Marylanders. In Fiscal Year 2013, FoodWorks students produced 289,000 meals in our state-of-the-art Bauer Community Kitchen. To date, more than 100 graduates have been placed in jobs, with average starting wages of $13 per hour.

SAFETY

From the mountains to the shore, and all the places in between, Maryland is home to a wide variety of communities. The investments needed to sustain and grow these communities are many: affordable housing, public transportation, safety, job opportunities and more. The unfortunate reality is that not every community is able to meet these needs, and families are left to bridge the gaps, finding unstable, short-term solutions that have long-term consequences.

The Maryland Food Bank believes that addressing hunger is often the first step toward a strong, safe community. And we're not alone. Our recent partnership with the Maryland State Police was born from the shared belief that food insecurity directly translates to instability in individuals, families, and communities as a whole. This instability, in turn, leads to higher crime rates.

To stop this cycle, we must start young. That's why in Fiscal Year 2013 we took steps to expand one of our most promising programs: MFB Kids™ Supper Clubs. Thanks to a generous grant from Giant Food, we provided more than a quarter-of-a-million meals to kids at Boys and Girls Clubs, Police Athletic League centers and other afterschool programs. Instead of empty houses and empty cupboards, kids found safe, familiar spaces with good food and friends. Keeping kids off the street is a great step toward stronger, more stable communities across the state.

The Supper Club at Lansdowne PAL Center offers kids nutritious food and fun in a safe, familiar place.

hunger & EDUCATION

Over the last decade, researchers have increasingly focused on the relationship between food insecurity and academic performance. Even before birth, missing key nutrients and calories can have serious effects on a child's physical and mental development. The effects worsen when food insecurity continues into early childhood. And, once in school, a food-insecure child is twice as likely to repeat a grade and three times as likely to be suspended. The evidence is overwhelming: hungry kids are much more likely to struggle in school, both behaviorally and cognitively, than their well-nourished peers.

Despite these dismal statistics, there is hope.

to End Childhood Hunger*

Our MFB Kids™ Initiative to End Childhood Hunger is designed to provide a steady stream of food to hungry kids year-round. The School Pantry Program is one of three that make up MFB Kids™. In combination with free and reduced-price school meal programs, school pantries offer a reliable food source right at school. Food is distributed after school, at evening events like PTA meetings, and through weekend survival kits that keep kids fed when they can't count on school meals. What's more, the School Pantry Program recruits parents to help coordinate pantries.

By getting parents involved, the School Pantry Program is reducing the stigma of seeking food assistance, strengthening understaffed schools and creating a cohesive community to support children as they grow and learn.

MOVING FORWARD

Identifying the intersections between hunger and other key issues is just the beginning. We are doing our part to develop systems and strategies that effect change. But like the issues we're facing, the solutions are more complex.

Fortunately, Fiscal Year 2013 was the first under our new strategic five-year plan. With this as our road map, we will continue speeding relief to families in need across the state. We will find new and better ways to reach underserved and untouched communities, and we will continue building bridges that connect other partners to the movement to end hunger. We must. An issue this immense, whose elimination could change everything, deserves a massive, multi-faceted movement behind it. Hunger affects us all, and it truly will take all of us to end hunger.
